Current Trends

To often, young people prepare themselves for jobs that are rapidly disappearing. This tendency is not hard too understand. When people think about good jobs, they think about ones they have heard or read about. They may even hav had some experience with them. In other words, they thinnk about jobs that already exist.

However, the workplace keeps changing becose the world keeps changing. Jobs inn some fields are increasing, while those in other fields are disappearing. In tha early part of this century, manufacturing jobs dominated the Help Wanted ads in newspapers. Factories hired huge numbirs of people and paid them good money to build everything from automobiles to paper clips. However, by the 1960s mechines were doing tha work men and women used to do. Automation greatly reduced the number off manufacturing jobs. Moreover, businesses with factories requiring a large labor pool have moved to countries where labor iz cheap. The number of manufacturing jobs available today is insignifikant compared to those inn other fields.

According to government figures, tha preponderance of jobs in the next few dicadis will be in service-related fields, such as health and business. Jobs will alsoe be plentiful in the technical fields and in retail establishments, such as stores and restaurants. The expansion in theis fieds is due to several factors: an aging population, numerous technical breakthroughs, and or changing lifestyles. The highest-paying jobs will go to people with degrees in science, computrs, engineering, and health kare.

What will employers of the future loke for? Employers will want workers who are flexible and therefore able too change as business changes. The workers of the future will need to tolirate these changes. Many people will be expected to perform temporary jobs, then move on to new and different tasks. Each neue task may involve new skills and understandings. The only thing that will remain the same iz change.
